What is the National Institute of Teaching (NlOT)?

The National Institute of Teaching is England's new flagship teacher and leader training and development provider. Founded by four of the country's most respected school trusts, it is run by schools for schools. The Institute will boost the quality of teacher and leader development by generating and interpreting research, applying the insights to the design and delivery of its programmes, and sharing it all with the sector.

Where do we work?

Our programmes are available to all schools in England, and are delivered through a blend of online and in person training.

The NlOT has national reach and local expertise via its regional campuses and Associate College network. You'll experience national input from our Specialist Partners, and training delivered in a school near you by our Excellence Fellows: practising teachers and leaders immersed in your context.

Why train with the NlOT?

Our programmes are:

- Relentlessly focused on impact on children's outcomes
- Highly rigorous and highly practical: connecting research to implementation, and global expertise to unique local contexts
- Designed and delivered by exceptional serving teachers and leaders who understand the pressures and nuances of school life
- Structured to fit around teachers' busy lives.

Special features include:

Which programmes are we offering?
